- Explain that activity centers are about engaging children in largely independent activities to support exploration, creativity, confidence, and self-direction. They give students opportunities to explore, follow interests, and target specific skills. They free staff to circulate, talk with students, and support children and youth choice. Children can also help design, set up, and clean up activity.
- Ask participants to discuss potential challenges. (e.g. Having enough resources, time to set up well)
- Ask which literacy skills and activities lend themselves to activity centers. Explain that activities need to be interesting and motivating to grab and hold children's attention.

Literacy Activity Centers

Activity Centers could focus on the 5 components of reading: phonemic awareness, phonics, fluency, vocabulary and comprehension. They could also focus on the different standards areas such as reading, writing, speaking, listening and language. For literacy activity ideas, see tools in Trainings to Go.

- In pairs, review the Literacy Activity Center Planner.
- Select an activity center to plan, and complete the planner. Specify objectives, and describe what children do at the center.
- Share ideas in the full group and discuss from the standpoints of motivation, ease of use, age appropriateness, and supervision.
